

Agricultural policy

The effects of improved international market access for agricultural products

- Inside the WTO some developing countries try to improve the access for imported agricultural products in the markets of the industrial countries. This will make changes to both consumption and production in the developing countries on the micro or macro level. How does trade policy (either liberalizing access to imports or promoting exports) affect a country's economic development and how is income redistributed?

Contact person: Roberto Garcia, School of Economics and Business, NMBU:

roberto.garcia@nmbu.no